Best and Worst States for an Animal Collision in 2022: CarInsurance.com Report
October-November is peak migratory season for deer, so drivers should be cautious

Foster City, CA – October 13, 2022 – CarInsurance.com, a one-stop online destination for car insurance information, just released a guide to the best and worst states for animal collisions in 2022. Topping the list is West Virginia, while the District of Columbia comes in last.

Find the resource here: Best and worst states for vehicle and animal collisions in 2022

Top 5 states where you're most likely to hit an animal in 2022:

1. West Virginia: odds of 1 in 37
2. Montana: odds of 1 in 39
3. South Dakota: odds of 1 in 48
4. Michigan: odds of 1 in 54
5. Pennsylvania: odds of 1 in 54

Fall and spring are peak migratory seasons for animals such as deer, and October to December is the height of animal/vehicle collisions. Drivers should stay alert and pay attention to deer/wildlife crossing signs, look for the shining eyes of animals along the roadway, watch for animals around dusk and dawn, and brake/honk if an animal is near the road.

"Drivers can protect themselves in the event of an animal strike by buying comprehensive insurance coverage," says Laura Longero, executive editor for CarInsurance.com. "Comprehensive covers damage to your vehicle and passengers if you hit an animal with your vehicle. But drivers should be especially aware of animals on or around roadways in October, November and December."

Longero is available to discuss this report and comprehensive insurance.
